In Sub-Saharan Africa, more than 300 million people - a number equal to the population of the United States - lack access to clean water. As Earth Day approaches on April 22, you may be thinking about ways that you can help make a difference. Several organizations have made providing clean water to those in need their primary mission, including the Voss Foundation.

The Voss Foundation is a non-profit organization dedicated to providing access to clean water and raising awareness of the ongoing need in the region. Since 2008, the Voss Foundation has helped construct 36 water access points in five countries, changing the lives of more than 100,000 people in Kenya, Mali, Ethiopia and other countries.

Annually, VOSS Water conducts a campaign called 31 Days to Make a Difference, from which all proceeds support the Voss Foundation's work to build wells and water systems where the crisis is greatest.
